I. Purpose of This Booklet

Every crime victim has the right to file a civil lawsuit seeking financial compensation from the perpetrator or from other parties whose unreasonable conduct gave rise to conditions which allowed the crime to occur. The purpose of this handbook is to provide victims and service providers with a basic understanding of the civil justice system so that victims might consider this important option and know where to turn for help.

II. Victims' Financial Losses and Potential Sources of Compensation

Almost nineteen million Americans are victimized by crime each year. The consequences of crime frequently extend far beyond the criminal act. All too often, victims are left with expenses for medical procedures, physical rehabilitation, counseling, lost wages, and property damage. It has been estimated that crime costs society $450 billion annually.

Restitution

Under North Carolina law, a court may order a defendant who is convicted in a criminal case to financially compensate a victim through restitution for injuries suffered as a result of the crime. The court may require the restitution to be paid by a certain date, or paid in installments over a certain period of time. Additionally, if the restitution is in excess of $250.00 it is enforced as a civil judgment. The judgment remains in effect until the restitution is satisfied. The court clerk is required to notify the victim at the victim's address of record of the status of the restitution if there is a change due to revocation of probation. In any civil action brought by a victim against the defendant for damages arising out of the offense for which the defendant was convicted, all restitution paid by the defendant to the victim will be credited against any judgment in the civil case. Finally, restitution may be paid out of a perpetrator's work-release income if so ordered.

Crime Victim Compensation

Compensation may be awarded to victims of crime through the North Carolina Victims Compensation Services in the Department of Public Safety. Compensation is awarded to innocent victims of crime committed in North Carolina. Expenses that are covered include medical care, counseling, lost wages and funerals. Expenses that are not covered include property damage or losses and expenses related to pain and suffering.

Under N.C.G.S. §15B-2(1), a maximum of $30,000 may be paid to compensate for medical expenses related to the crime, and a maximum of $5,000 may be paid for funeral expenses when the victim dies as a result of the crime.

A victim is eligible to apply for compensation so long as the crime has been reported to law enforcement within 72 hours if good cause can be shown for a delay. Within a two-year period from reporting the crime to law enforcement, a victim is able to apply for compensation. Additionally, the victim must have experienced bodily injury or severe emotional stress as a result of the crime.

The application is initially reviewed by an intake professional to ensure all forms are signed and properly submitted. The application is then assigned to a caseworker for investigation. Decisions on the compensation are made by the Crime Victims Compensation Commission. If an application is not approved, an applicant may appeal the decision to the State Courts of North Carolina. Benefits may not be approved, for example, in the event that the victim in some way was involved in the incidence leading to his/her injury.

Civil Actions May Help Where Restitution and State Compensation Cannot

Both restitution and compensation, alone, often do not cover a victim's full economic losses, nor hard-to-quantify damages such as pain and suffering. A civil lawsuit may provide more complete compensation to a victim.

III. Why File a Civil Suit

Some of the benefits of civil actions may include:

- Control of the Case. Victims have greater control in a civil suit than in a criminal case because they are a party to the civil case, cannot be excluded from the courtroom, and have final approval of settlement proposals.

- Compensation. Civil actions can provide greater compensation for victims for the monetary damages they suffered, such as medical expenses and lost income. Civil actions can also compensate victims for the emotional damage they have suffered.
- Justice and Accountability. Civil suits can hold offenders directly accountable to victims. These suits give victims their “day in court,” regardless of whether there was a criminal conviction or any prosecution at all.
- Crime Prevention. In addition to suing perpetrators, victims can often sue other responsible parties. Civil actions provide economic incentives for crime prevention. Businesses such as hotels, apartments, and shopping centers sometimes fail to enact proper security measures because they view such expenses as unnecessary. When businesses are held accountable for safety lapses, proper security becomes cheaper than the cost of defending lawsuits. Crime victims’ civil suits have resulted in increased security protection in public places, better oversight and supervision of daycare facilities, and countless other improvements.

IV. Civil Versus Criminal Justice

A significant difference between the criminal and civil court systems is that in a civil case, the victim controls essential decisions shaping the case. It is the victim who decides whether to sue, accept a settlement offer, or go to trial.

The Criminal Justice System

The criminal justice process begins after a crime has been committed and reported to law enforcement. If an arrest has been made and charges have been filed, the offender may be prosecuted. In a criminal prosecution, the crime is considered “a crime against the state.” The victim’s role is primarily defined as a witness for the prosecution. Although the prosecuting attorney may be very helpful to the victim and the victim’s family, the prosecutor’s primary responsibility is to represent the interests of the state, not the victim.

The criminal justice process judges the guilt or innocence of accused offenders, and when offenders are found guilty, attempts to punish or rehabilitate them.

Crime Victim Rights in the North Carolina Criminal Justice System

Article 46 of the North Carolina General Statutes sets forth the rights that victims have in their criminal cases prosecuted by the State. These rights include but are not limited to:

- Notice of the steps the District Attorney’s Office is taking in prosecuting the criminal case
- Notices of some, all, or none of the trial and post-trial proceedings involving the perpetrator
- a secure waiting area during court proceedings that does not place the victim in close proximity to the defendant or the defendant’s family; and
- The opportunity to consult with the prosecuting attorney to obtain the views of the victim about the disposition of the case, including victim’s views about dismissal, plea or negotiations, sentencing, and any pretrial diversion program

However, the failure or inability of any person to provide a right or service under this Article may not be used by any victim, as a ground for compensation in any criminal or civil proceeding. Each district attorney’s office has a designated person who serves as a contact person for victims of felony crimes. This person will assist the crime victim who chooses to prepare a victim impact statement that will be reviewed by the judge and/or jury before sentencing takes place. This statement can include an explanation of any economic or property loss suffered by the victim as a result of the offense committed by the perpetrator and a request for restitution for those losses.

The Civil Justice System

The civil justice system does not attempt to determine the innocence or guilt of an offender. Offenders are also not put in prison. Rather, civil courts attempt to determine whether an offender or a third party is liable for the injuries sustained as a result of the crime.

A civil court’s finding of liability usually means that the defendant must pay the victim, or the victim’s family, monetary damages. The civil justice system can provide victims with monetary resources necessary to rebuild their lives. Furthermore, the civil justice system often provides victims and their families with a sense of justice that criminal courts fail to provide. Rather than holding defendants accountable for their “crimes against the state,” the civil justice system holds defendants who are found liable directly accountable to their victims.

CRIMINAL CASES

In a CRIMINAL case

...The goal is to hold the defendant accountable to the State

...The State prosecutes and controls the case

...The victim is a witness. Although the victim may have rights to participate in the criminal justice process, the victim does not have the right to direct the prosecution of the case or to veto the prosecutor's decisions

...The State must prove that the defendant is guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt."

...The defendant is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

...If a perpetrator is found guilty in a criminal court, the perpetrator is subject to punishment, such as probation or jail, and is held accountable to the State. The victim will not receive money unless the court orders the perpetrator to pay restitution for the victim's out-of-pocket expenses. The court cannot order restitution for non-economic damages.

...If the perpetrator is found not guilty, the state cannot initiate a second prosecution.

CIVIL LAWSUITS

In a CIVIL lawsuit

...The goal is to hold the defendant accountable to the victim.

...The victim initiates and controls the case.

...The victim is a party, and as such, is entitled to all important information relating to the case, and can make important decisions about the case, such as settlement of the claim.

...The victim must prove that it is more likely than not that the defendant is liable.

...The civil system makes no presumption. The victim and the defendant appear as equals.

...If the perpetrator is found liable in a civil court, the perpetrator owes an obligation to the victim, such as money to compensate the victim for medical and therapy expenses, psychological damage, damage to family relationships, and lost wages. A civil court can order the perpetrator to pay for non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering, damage to family relationships, and psychological injuries. The civil court can also order punitive damages as a form of punishment and to deter other potential defendants from similar conduct.

...The victim can sue the perpetrator in a civil court regardless of whether the perpetrator has been found guilty in a criminal prosecution.

Burden of Proof

In the civil justice system, liability must be proven by a fair preponderance of the evidence, which simply means that one side's evidence is more persuasive than the other's.

In other words, the plaintiff must prove there is a fifty-one percent or greater chance that the defendant committed all the elements of the particular wrong. This standard is lower than the "proof beyond a reasonable doubt" required for a conviction in the criminal justice system. Therefore, it is sometimes possible to find the defendant liable in a civil case even though a verdict of "not guilty" was rendered in the criminal case. (A civil case can also be successful even if the offender was never prosecuted.)

A good example of this principle is the O.J. Simpson case. Simpson was prosecuted for the murder of his former wife, Nicole Brown, and her friend, Ronald Goldman. The jury in the criminal case found Simpson "not guilty" of the murders. Despite Simpson's acquittal, the families of Nicole Brown and Ron Goldman filed a civil wrongful death lawsuit against Simpson. A trial was held in 1997 and Simpson was found liable for the deaths of Brown and Goldman. The jury in the civil case awarded the victims' families $33.5 million in damages. While a criminal conviction may increase the chances of a perpetrator being held civilly liable, it is not a requirement for bringing a civil action.

V. Parties in a Civil Suit

Plaintiffs

The main parties in a civil suit are called plaintiffs and defendants. Plaintiffs are the individuals who file the suit. They control the action, are entitled to all information relating to the case, and make decisions, such as settlement. The plaintiff in a civil suit can be the victim, survivors of the victim, or persons responsible for the victim.

Perpetrators

Offenders are the individuals who committed the original crime, whether or not they were found guilty by a criminal court.

Defendants

Defendants are the parties against whom a civil action is brought. The defendants in a civil suit can be the perpetrators. Individuals who have assisted the perpetrators, or individuals or organizations whose negligence has in some way contributed to or facilitated the commission of the crime, may also be defendants. A few examples of such defendants in a victim's case would include:

- Landlords who do not provide adequate security measures, such as locks on doors and windows and adequate lighting;
- Colleges that fail to provide adequate security for students or fail to notify students of campus assaults, leaving students vulnerable to victimization;
- Shopping malls that do not employ security guards or take other necessary measures, despite a likelihood of criminal attacks on customers;
- People who allow children access to firearms or other dangerous instruments when the children, in turn, use the weapons to injure other people;
- Childcare centers, group homes, schools, and churches that do not properly check the backgrounds of their employees, do not properly train or supervise their employees, or simply transfer employees to other locations following allegations of abuse;
- Tavern owners or social hosts who continue to serve alcohol to inebriated persons who subsequently injure other people in drunk driving crashes;
- Correctional institutions and agencies for negligent supervision

- Government or law enforcement for failure to protect

Family Members

Family members who might bring a civil suit include the parents, spouse, children, or siblings of the victim.

VI. Statutes of Limitations

Statutes of limitations are statutes passed by the NC General Assembly that limit the period of time during which a victim may file a claim for the injury or damage complained of. Although there are no statutes of limitations for criminal acts, there are varying statutes of limitations for torts. If the claim is not filed within the period of time defined, the victim loses their right to sue for that particular harm. Some examples of commonly complained of torts and their corresponding statutes of limitations follow:

3-Year Limitation:

- Assault and/or Battery [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(19)]
- Personal Injury [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(5)]
- Injury to Personal Property [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(4)]
- Fraud [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(9)]
- Trespass [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(3)]
- Medical malpractice: 3 years from injury or 2 years from discovery of injury [N.C.G.S. § 1-15(c)]

2-Year Limitation:

- Wrongful Death [N.C.G.S. §1-53(4)]

1-Year Limitation:

- Libel/Slander [N.C.G.S. § 1-54(3)]

For certain claims, North Carolina follows the discovery rule which allows for a delay in the commencement of the statute of limitations and applies when a victim discovers or should have reasonably discovered the harm done to him/her by a particular act.

For victims of child sexual abuse, once a victim turns 18, they must bring the action within 3 years of the date of the abuse. The discovery rule also applies in instances of sexual abuse, allowing a victim to bring a claim within three years of when he/she discovered, or reasonably should have discovered, that the sexual abuse caused the injury for which the claim is filed [N.C.G.S. § 1-52(16)].

Statutes of limitations can change. If you believe you have a claim, you should speak to a qualified attorney immediately.

VII. Types of Civil Lawsuits

There are numerous claims under which civil actions may be brought. They include wrongful death, assault and battery, intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. Some of these claims are described below.

In civil cases, the crime or wrongful act is referred to as a tort. For most criminal offenses, there is a corresponding tort for which a crime victim may bring a civil suit. Torts may be intentional or negligent acts. Examples of some of the different types of torts include:

Intentional Torts

- Assault. Intentionally placing a person in reasonable fear of an imminent, harmful or offensive contact.
- Battery. Intentional and harmful or offensive physical contact with a person without that person's consent. Oft-quoted in North Carolina case law, it is "unlawful beating or other physical violence or constraint inflicted on a person without his consent." Battery can include the crimes of sexual battery, rape, sexual servitude, and attempted murder, to name a few.
- Wrongful Death. Death caused by a wrongful act or the neglect of another, including murder, manslaughter, and vehicular homicide. [N.C.G.S. 28A-18-2].
- False Imprisonment. The illegal restraint of a person against that person's will. False imprisonment often occurs in rape and kidnapping situations.
- Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. Intentional conduct that is extreme, outrageous and causes severe emotional distress to the plaintiff. Emotional distress is frequently seen in stalking cases.
- Fraud. Intentional misrepresentation of facts made to deceive the victim, resulting in damages. This is often seen in white collar or economic crimes such as criminal fraud, telemarketing schemes, or racketeering.
- Conversion. Theft or destruction of personal property or money. This includes larceny, concealment, and embezzlement.

Negligence

- Negligence. Failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent person would use under similar circumstances, when such failure is the cause of the plaintiff's injury. Examples include negligent security, negligent hiring and negligent supervision.

- Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress. Negligent conduct that would be reasonably foreseeable to cause severe emotional distress to the victim, and does in fact, cause the plaintiff severe emotional distress. Such emotional distress is frequently experienced not only by victims but also by family members who may be present at the time of the harmful event.
- Negligence Per Se. The violation of a statute that is designed to protect the class of persons to which the plaintiff belongs from injuries of the kind that the plaintiff has suffered. Defendant's violation of a statute may be used as evidence of negligence in a civil case.

VIII. Defenses to Civil Lawsuits

There are several defenses that defendants of a civil lawsuit may use in an effort to avoid civil liability. These defenses include: self-defense or defense of others, contributory negligence, assumption of the risk, and immunity.

Self-Defense or Defense of Others

Perpetrators claim their actions were justified because they were defending themselves or someone else. Defendants raising this defense must establish that the use of any force, and the amount of such force, was reasonable under the circumstances.

Contributory Negligence

The defendant claims that the victim's negligent conduct caused or contributed to the victim's injuries. In North Carolina, a victim cannot win a judgment if the victim is found to be even 1% at fault for their injury, as determined by the judge or the jury.

Assumption of Risk

Defendants claim they should not be held liable because the victims voluntarily and knowingly exposed themselves to the danger of the incident which resulted in their injury.

Immunity

Under certain circumstances, the law provides immunity from civil liability to government agencies, government employees, and other parties.

IX. Victim Privacy

Attorneys may employ various methods to protect victims' privacy. Victims' names and other personal information can be kept out of public records by filing suits under pseudonyms, such as Jane or John Doe. Victims can also use confidentiality agreements with the offender, or third-party defendant; file cases "under seal" (closed to the public); and videotape depositions. Each of these techniques allows victims to fight for their rights in a safer manner.

X. Filing a Civil Lawsuit

Civil lawsuits are governed by the Rules of Civil Procedure under N.C.G.S. §1A-1. A victim begins the civil case by filing a document that in most states is called the Complaint. The Complaint sets out the facts of the case and the legal claims being made. Defendants then have a certain amount of time to file a document called the Answer. In this, defendants set forth their version of the facts and any defenses which they claim. As a part of the process of each party building their case, either side can request information from the other side. (For more information, see "Discovery.") In addition, either party can file motions asking the court to throw out certain claims or defenses or dismiss the entire case.

XI. Discovery

As part of the legal process, each side can ask the other side for information and documents relating to the case. This process is called discovery. Civil discovery involves investigation of the facts of the case, interviewing witnesses, obtaining relevant documents, and questioning parties and other witnesses under oath. The investigation may include a review of police records, informal interviews eye witnesses and photographing the location of the crime. Parties may seek all non-privileged information, even information that will be inadmissible at trial, if that information seems likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Interrogatories

Interrogatories are a list of written questions sent to the opposing party. A party can serve no more than 50 interrogatories under North Carolina law. In North Carolina, a party on whom an interrogatory has been served must respond within 30 days.

Request for Production of Documents

As with interrogatories, one side can formally request the other to produce documents and materials relevant to the case. Generally, the other party must respond to a document request within 30 days.

Depositions

An additional way to collect information in the pretrial portion of the civil case is a deposition. A deposition is a proceeding in which a party's attorney has the opportunity to question opposing parties and potential witnesses under oath. Deposition testimony is transcribed, usually by a court reporter. The transcripts may be used at trial for various reasons, including if the witnesses are no longer available to testify or if the witnesses offer testimony at trial that conflicts with the deposition.

After documents have been produced, interrogatories have been answered and depositions have been completed, each side should know more about the other side's case. At this point the parties sometimes engage in negotiations which can lead to the settlement of the case without the need for a trial.

XII. Mediation

Mediation is a process through which a professional mediator guides a settlement conversation between the parties. The mediator helps the parties exchange information and understand the positions and goals of each side in an effort to work towards a resolution of the case.

By statute, mediation is mandatory in civil lawsuits filed in Superior Court in North Carolina. After discovery has been completed, the court requires the parties, their attorneys and others, such as insurance adjusters, to meet and discuss the possibility of settlement with the assistance of a trained mediator.

Parties may benefit from this process by having an opportunity to settle their claim themselves, rather than having a judge or jury decide the matter for them. If they can reach a settlement agreement, parties control their outcome and avoid the inherent risk of a trial and the possibility of an appeal. Parties may also save time, money and the stress associated with a trial.

If a settlement agreement is not reached during mediation, the case will continue on to the trial phase.

XIII. Trial

The case proceeds to trial if the parties have been unable to reach a settlement prior to the trial date. A plaintiff wins at trial if the plaintiff has met its burden of proof and the defendant has not successfully asserted a defense to the claim. If the plaintiff wins, the judge or jury awards damages and the matter is over unless the defendant appeals. A defendant wins at trial if the plaintiff has not met the burden of proof or the defendant has successfully asserted a defense. If the defendant wins, the case is finished unless the plaintiff appeals.

XIV. Damages

Judges and juries have the power to decide how much money to award as damages if the plaintiff wins. There are two main types of damages, compensatory and punitive. The goal of compensatory damages is to pay for the losses suffered by the injured party and make them “whole” again to the extent that this is possible. The primary purpose of punitive damages is to punish and to deter criminals or third parties from engaging in similar conduct.

XV. Judgment and Enforcement

A victim contemplating a civil lawsuit should understand that obtaining a civil judgment is only half the battle. In many cases, it may be difficult to collect the money awarded by the court. Some defendants do not or cannot pay judgments entered against them. However, there are potential sources of payment, such as insurance or various types of income, which should always be considered.

XVI. When a Perpetrator Sues a Victim

Occasionally, offenders may sue or countersue victims. Defendants may take this step in order to harass or intimidate victims into dropping charges or withdrawing their civil suits.

Sometimes these suits are filed in response to the victim’s civil complaint, along with answers to the complaint. Sometimes perpetrators file them in response to a criminal charge. Victims need to know that truth is an absolute defense to defamation and slander, which are the most common civil claims filed by perpetrators.

XVII. About Lawyers

Finding a Lawyer

The National Center for Victims of Crime established the National Crime Victim Bar Association (NCVBA) to facilitate civil suits by crime victims. The NCVBA offers victims free referrals to attorneys for consultation.

Victims seeking more information or attorney referrals should call the NCVBA at 202-467-8716

Selection Considerations

More attorneys than ever are representing crime victims in civil lawsuits, though relatively few specifically list themselves as “crime victim” attorneys. Typically, these attorneys can be found handling premises liability, personal injury, wrongful death, or professional malpractice claims on behalf of plaintiffs. Finding qualified attorneys to represent victims in civil lawsuits often requires diligence.

A productive attorney-client relationship is based on the ability of both sides to communicate fully and effectively with each other. Although relating sensitive details can be difficult for crime victims, they should feel as comfortable as possible in fully disclosing all details and information to their attorneys. Attorneys should be able to effectively explain all aspects of legal proceedings to victims, and they should be responsive to victims’ needs and requests.

Victims should fully understand all the details of any retainer agreement (contract to hire the attorney) prior to signing it. If victims have questions, they should feel comfortable discussing them with their attorneys.

Victims should be clear about their expectations of the performance of their attorney. Conversely, attorneys should be clear about what services they agree to provide. Understanding each other’s expectations and avoiding unrealistic expectations can minimize the possibility of disappointment and frustration as victim and attorney work together toward winning the case.

Victims should feel free to consult with several lawyers before selecting one. Lawyers are professionals, and it is good consumer practice to obtain a second opinion when choosing professional legal counsel.

Victims should cooperate, as fully as possible, with their attorneys. Such cooperation is necessary for successful representation of their interests. By the same token, victims have the right to expect their attorneys to be understanding, respectful, and responsive to their needs. Attorneys have the right to expect their clients to be honest and willing to participate in building their own cases. When each understands the importance of their role and contributes to the case as expected, success is easier to achieve.

Information Your Attorney May Need

When crime victims consult with an attorney, they should be prepared to answer detailed questions about the case that will allow the attorney to conduct a proper evaluation. Attorneys might request information such as the following:

About the Criminal Event

- Date and time of the criminal occurrence
- Location of events, addresses, and description of premises
- How the perpetrator gained access to the victim
- Identification of witnesses to any stage of the occurrence
- Identification of known physical evidence
- Whether a police report was filed, and if so, identification of the police department where the complaint was filed, the detective or officer assigned to the case, the complaint or report number, and statements taken as part of an investigation
- Whether there was or is a criminal case, and if so, identification of: the prosecutor, current stage of criminal case, and description of the case investigation conducted
- If a third party might bear some liability for the occurrence of the crime, details surrounding the crime, such as where it was committed and whether there was any security present at the time of the incident

About the Perpetrator

- If the perpetrator is known to the victim, nature of relationship with victim, perpetrator's name and aliases, address, date of birth and Social Security Number, employment information, and any information known about the perpetrator's assets or insurance coverage
- If the perpetrator is not known to the victim: physical description of the perpetrator, identifying features, such as sound of voice, vehicle description (if any), or any other observations made by the victim

About Damages Sustained by the Victim

- The nature and degree of physical, emotional, and psychological injuries sustained
- Identification of hospitalization, medical services, psychological services, or any other professional treatment provided
- Medical records and medical bills
- Photos of injuries, bruising or scarring
- Names of family/friends who can speak about the impact of the injuries to victim
- Information about victim's employment
- Time and wages lost from work by victim or victim's family members
- Sources of funds the victim may have to cover damages or losses such as insurance (policy number), Medicaid/Medicare, workers' compensation benefits, state or private disability insurance Crime Victims' Compensation, and/or restitution
- Identification of property damage

Fees and Retainers

Usually, the types of civil cases brought by victims of crime are billed by attorneys on a contingency fee basis. This means the attorney is only paid if the victim is awarded a monetary settlement or judgment. Attorneys will be paid a predetermined percentage of the total award.

There are also costs, such as filing fees, deposition fees, and service of process fees the victim might be responsible to pay before a suit is filed or during the course of the suit. Some attorneys require that plaintiffs pay a retainer fee. A retainer is money paid to an attorney, but kept in a special account from which the above-mentioned costs can be paid. Money not used in the retainer may be returned to the client at the conclusion of the suit.

XVIII. Conclusion

The civil justice system offers victims of crime another opportunity to secure what they seek most – justice. Regardless of whether there was a successful criminal prosecution or any prosecution at all, victims can bring their claims before the court and ask that the responsible parties be held accountable for the injuries/damage they caused. While money awarded in civil lawsuits can never fully compensate victims for the trauma suffered as a result of the crime, their victimizations or the loss of loved ones, it can provide valuable resources for crime victims to get the help they need to heal as they work toward rebuilding their lives.
